CULTURE: Dahlias are easily grown, requiring no special soil or care. They prefer an open, sunny situation, but will grow in partial shade. Potato or corn soil is suitable. Plant only after all danger of frost is over, from April 15 to June 15; the later plantings give the best flowers. Plow or spade soil as deeply as possible. Do not use fresh stable manure in spring. Well-rotted manure, bone meal, pulverized sheep manure, and commercial fertilizers may be used. But do not over-fertilize. Plant in rows, three feet apart, about six inches deep. Place tuber on side. NOT ON END. Keep ground well cultivated. When buds appear, mulch the ground with well-rotted manure if possible. Water thoroughly. Disbudding side buds, leaving only the terminals, gives larger flowers. When plants are blackened by first frost, cut tops near ground, raise clumps carefully, allowing to dry in air a few hours. Store in dry cellar in temperature about 40 degrees. Put in paper-lined boxes, in sand or dry soil, to keep from shrivelling. In spring divide clump, leaving an eye to each tuber. A tuber without an eye is "blind" and worthless.
